Commissioner's Comment

He kōrero tuatahi

As employees of New Zealand Police we are individually and collectively responsible for how we conduct ourselves.

New Zealand Police's reputation is vital in achieving Our Business. With social media we are scrutinised more than ever as an organisation and as individuals. How we go about policing is as important as the outcomes we achieve.

As Commissioner, the priorities I have introduced enable us to build on the high levels of trust and confidence New Zealanders have in Police. The community rightly holds us to high standards of behaviour in both our work and our private lives. As employees of New Zealand Police, we must be mindful of our behaviour at all times. Whether we are working or not, we represent the organisation.

I recognise that no Code can detail every behaviour expected of us. However, our Code of Conduct is a guiding document that sets out common standards of behaviour for all of us. It guides our judgement, choices and actions, whatever role we have here at Police. It guides me as the Commissioner, our leaders and you.

Our Code asks us to consciously exhibit behaviour which is aligned to Our Values:

- ▶ Professionalism
- ▶ Respect
- ▶ Integrity
- ▶ Commitment to Māori & the Treaty
- ▶ Empathy
- ▶ Valuing Diversity

The context we operate within requires us all to bring humanity, empathy, cultural awareness and understanding along with integrity to all our interactions within our communities and each other.

New Zealand Police plays a significant role in New Zealand society. I am humbled to work with people every day who are committed to the high standards of conduct we expect from each other. We are all leaders in how we conduct ourselves so as an organisation our reputation in the community reflects our values and the public's trust and confidence in us is enhanced.

Andrew Coster
Commissioner of Police

Introduction

Kupu Whakataki

As representatives of New Zealand Police, how we behave is important. By choosing to work at this organisation, we are choosing to uphold the principles and intent of this Code and the underpinning values of Police.

We cannot underestimate the significance of living our values and role modelling our Code in our vision to make New Zealand the safest country. Just like the communities we serve, we want our people to be safe, especially at work.

Who does it apply to and when?

Ka pā tēnei ki a wai, āhea hoki?

This Code applies to anyone who is employed or engaged by New Zealand Police, regardless of the position or rank held. This includes employees who are permanent, temporary or casual, contractors and consultants, volunteers, staff from other agencies we partner with and any other groups or individuals we have advised this Code applies to. This Code also applies to what we do outside of working hours where our actions may bring Police into disrepute or may damage trust and confidence Police as our employer has in us.

How can we be sure that our conduct complies with the code and policies?

Me pēhea tātou e mōhio ai, e ū ana ā tātou mahi ki ngā tikanga me ngā kaupapa here?

The Code provides general guidance and minimum expectations of the behaviour Police expects from us. No code or policy can cover every situation, so we need to consider our values, apply our common sense, act with self-respect, and consider the reputation of Police in our decision making.

If in doubt, it may help to consider the Self Check questions:

Would it withstand Scrutiny	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Community Police service Media and online
Is it in line with our Ethics	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Our Code Our Values High performing culture
Is the decision Lawful	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Laws Regulations Policies and guidelines
Is the decision Fair to all	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Community Colleagues and whānau People's individual circumstances

You can find more information about the Police Self-Check here

If you are at all uncertain of what is expected as an employee of Police, you should speak to your manager for clarification. Your Human Resources Advisor will also answer any questions you have about the code.

We have high standards

He pai rewā ā tātou

We aspire to have the trust and confidence of all, by living our values. We pride ourselves in being one of the most trusted Police services in the world. By being consistently honest and ethical, and applying SELF to our behaviour and decision making, we help bring our vision and values to life.

Our reputation

Tō tātou ingoa pai

We act professionally, exercise good judgement and are accountable for our behaviour. We must not do anything that may bring Police into disrepute. We consider the impact of our behaviour on Police at all times, including online or in social media, and outside of work. We protect Police's integrity and reputation by speaking up about any inappropriate behaviour we see and hear. By addressing inappropriate behaviour either directly or through managers, we make Police a safer and healthy workplace.

Our influence and conflicts of interest

Ō tātou kawē whakaaaro, me ngā pānga rongorua

A conflict of interest is a situation where our personal or professional interests may conflict with our position, obligations or responsibilities as a Police employee. Sometimes the appearance or perception of such a conflict of interest can be just as damaging as an actual conflict.

We must not act in a way that uses our influence, role or position to personal advantage or to the advantage of others we are associated with. This includes ensuring we access information through Police systems for legitimate work purposes only. It also includes never entering into a sexual or intimate relationship with someone we have met in a professional capacity if an imbalance of power exists or if that person is vulnerable. Further information on professional boundaries can be found here.

Instead, we raise potential conflicts of interest with our manager. By being open and honest as soon as we see a potential conflict of interest, we can be supported to ensure it doesn't become a problem.

We protect our people, our information, & our resources

Tiakina tātou i ā tātou tāngata, ā tātou pārongo, ā tātou rauemi

Our safety

Tō tātou haumarū

The work we do can be inherently risky. Regardless of our role, we all have responsibility for promoting and maintaining a safe working environment. This includes ensuring we are fit and not impaired (for example by alcohol or other drugs) to safely perform our roles. We keep ourselves, each other and the public safe, by appropriately managing and reporting any safety issues as soon as we are aware of them.

Our information

Ā tātou pārongo

Given the nature of our organisation and information systems, we have access to confidential, sensitive and personal information. As Police we are trusted by those we serve to be exemplary in our dealings with this information. We need to consistently practice good judgement and integrity when creating, accessing, modifying and using, securing and disclosing all information. We always need to handle information appropriately, for legitimate work purposes and in line with the law, our policies, processes and systems.

When we are unsure whether information is confidential or sensitive or how it should be handled, we seek advice from our manager.

Our resources

Ā tātou rauemi

We have an obligation to properly manage and use resources appropriately and in a way that ensures our working environment is safe. We take care of the equipment, tools and resources provided to us (including making sure they are fit for use by others) and make sure we use them appropriately, safely and for the designated purpose. This also includes Police systems and technology.

We do right by others

Ka tika rā ā tātou mahi ki ngā tangata

The purpose of New Zealand Police is to ensure everybody can be safe and feel safe. This means we do not tolerate or accept behaviour, by either the public or our colleagues, that breaks laws or compromises safety.

Our diversity

Tō tātou kanorau

Police is strengthened by diversity. Our differences equip us to be more effective in our approach to policing across a wide range of communities. We are committed to having a diverse workforce that is inclusive and respectful of each other's differences.

This means we treat all people respectfully, with empathy and dignity. We do so whether they are members of the public, colleagues, victims or offenders and regardless of the circumstances.

Our acceptance of others

Tō tātou whakaae ki ētahi atu

We ensure a healthy work environment that does not tolerate discrimination, harassment (including racial and sexual harassment), bullying, victimisation or any other unacceptable or offensive behaviour. There is no place in Police for inappropriate, derogatory or malicious behaviour towards, or discrimination against, another person for any reason including sex, marital status, religious belief, ethical belief, colour, race, ethnicity or national origin, disability, age, political opinion, employment status, family status, or sexual orientation (being the prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in the Human Rights Act 1993).

We are all responsible for ensuring this type of behaviour does not occur. Our policy, processes and further information about how you can play your part in ensuring we achieve healthy work places free from unacceptable behaviour can be found here.

Our history

Ō tātou kōrero tuku iho

We wear or identify with the New Zealand Coat of Arms which recognises the special relationship with Iwi. In line with our value of Commitment to Māori and the Treaty we recognise and seek to understand our history and to be responsive to Iwi specifically as tangata whenua.

We are responsible

He haepapa tātou

When we choose to work at Police we choose to be responsible for consistently demonstrating our values, working in a manner consistent with this Code, our Police policies and employment agreement and seeking help when we are unsure. This is required of us all.

What will happen if you breach the Code?

Ka aha mēnā ka whati koe te tikanga?

If your behaviour or decisions fall short of the required standard set out in this Code, your employment agreement and Police policies, we will talk with you and determine the circumstances and actions that have led to the situation.

If you have any concerns about your own behaviour, you are expected to discuss those concerns with your manager.

If you are the subject of any of the matters detailed below you must notify your manager as soon as possible.

- ▶ Any charge/s you are to face in court
- ▶ Becoming a respondent of a protection order
- ▶ Any infringement for driving with an excess breath or blood alcohol concentration, or other drug-impaired driving
- ▶ Any suspension of your driver's licence
- ▶ Any speeding notice at a speed in excess of 40km/hr above the limit
- ▶ Any charge or infringement that could lead to suspension or partial suspension of your driver's licence

Failure to notify your manager of any of these incidents may result in disciplinary action.

Your manager will advise the District Police Professional Conduct Manager or if you work at a Police Service Centre, the Police Professional Conduct Group at PNHQ. Consideration will then be given to what action will be taken.

Police has a disciplinary policy which outlines the process which is followed.

If you are found to have breached our Code of Conduct you may face disciplinary action which could include termination of your employment. Consideration will also be given to how any harm caused by your breach of the Code can be restored. Where harm is so significant and serious that it is unable to be restored then your employment may be terminated. That is, any final outcomes will depend on the seriousness of the situation.

Good employer principles and processes, and good faith will be applied in dealing with any breaches of the Code.

What does misconduct and serious misconduct look like?

He aha te āhua o te whanonga hē, me te whanonga tino hē?

Depending on the circumstances, misconduct may be considered serious misconduct, and vice versa. Misconduct and serious misconduct can apply to behaviour that has occurred outside of work.

The individual circumstances of each situation will determine how the misconduct is treated. These examples are intended as guidance only. They are not an exhaustive list of breaches of the Code of Conduct. Please use the SELF Check (page 5) to guide your decision making, or if you need further clarity talk to your manager or Human Resources before you take a course of action you think may fall outside the guidance outlined in this Code.

What is misconduct?

He aha te whanonga hē?

This is behaviour or actions that breach this Code of Conduct or other Police policies. While misconduct may not justify dismissal it may result in formal disciplinary action and consideration of how harm caused can be restored.

The following list, while not exhaustive, provides examples of potential misconduct. In some instances, the facts of a matter may be sufficiently serious that the conduct is viewed as serious misconduct.

MISCONDUCT

- » Breaching Police policies or procedures
- » Treating a person harshly
- » Using abusive or offensive language
- » Misuse of Police internet or email systems
- » Using any Police databases for any unauthorised or personal purpose
- » Being absent from work or late without proper reason
- » Failure to declare a conflict of interest
- » Misuse, mistreatment or not taking reasonable care of Police property
- » Not complying with a lawful and reasonable instruction without a good and sufficient reason
- » Bringing Police into disrepute through any actions or behaviour
- » Derogatory, or malicious behaviour, or discrimination on any of the prohibited grounds, towards another person including language (verbal, written, or otherwise) gestures, or actions.

What is serious misconduct?

He aha te whanonga tino hē?

This is behaviour or actions that breach this Code of Conduct or other Police policies and employment agreements and seriously undermine or damage the trust and confidence Police has in you, calling into question if the employment relationship can continue. It is behaviour or actions that, if substantiated, may justify dismissal.

The examples provided below could include, but are not limited to, the following:

SERIOUS MISCONDUCT

- ▤ Being convicted of or pleading guilty to an offence
- ▤ Corruption – accepting a bribe, inducement or reward
- ▤ Bullying or harassment (including sexual or racial harassment)
- ▤ Sexual misconduct
- ▤ Objectively abusive or offensive language, or gestures that may be interpreted as predatory, sexual, malicious, or threatening
- ▤ Theft or dishonesty of any kind
- ▤ Unauthorised access to, or disclosure of any matter or information related to Police business including NIA
- ▤ Repeated misconduct (including breach of a warning or repeated failure to take agreed steps to restore relationships and/or repair harm)
- ▤ Knowingly making a false declaration or statement (including incorrectly recording data)
- ▤ Excessive unjustified violence

What is considered?

He aha ngā whaiwhakaaro?

In considering if a behaviour or decision is a breach of this Code and how serious it is, the factors that may be considered are:

- ▤ The nature and circumstances
- ▤ Intent – did you knowingly make decisions or act out of line with this Code, Our Values and policies?
- ▤ Your position, duties and responsibilities
- ▤ Your ability to fulfil your duties and responsibilities
- ▤ The impact on the organisation and relationships
- ▤ Impact on the trust and confidence Police has in you
- ▤ How similar behaviour has been treated in the past

When we choose to work at Police we choose to be responsible for consistently demonstrating our values, working in a manner consistent with this Code, our Police policies and employment agreement and seeking help when we are unsure. This is required of us all.
